Jeremy wakes early to prepare for his day.

This is the path Google Maps gives him. Which he has memorized and uses every day to get to class.

This path is long and circuitous, meaning that Jeremy is often late despite his early start.

Not only that, but due to the long walks, he's tired before the day is even over.

This happens because google maps often fails to account for pedestrian shortcuts, such as alleys, connected buildings, and side entrances.

With a route like this, Jeremy can easily reach class on time with minimal walking.
